Report of Superintendent of Schools

To the Superintending School Committee and Citizens of Norridgewock:

I have the honor to submit my second annual report, together with the reports of the Vocational Educational Department.

In the opinion of a recent writer, it was a shame that this depression should have come right in the midst of hard times. Reflection upon this statement shows it to have other than humorous meaning. If by hard times, we understand the inevitable reaction that follows a period of excessive prosperity, and by depression, the despondency, and lack of mutual confidence that the reaction produced, we may very properly lament the last of these results that accompanied the first.

All social life, all stability and progress depend upon each man's confidence in his neighbor. Local problems of even greater magnitude than those that now confront us have been solved by several generations of thoughtful hardworking citizens and capable courageous public servants. With courage, sanity and friendliness we must work together to continue the maintenance of our schools on a high standard in the face of a necessary reduction in the school income.

Satisfactory standards of accomplishment were maintained in our schools the past year. Teachers did their work faithfully. Symbolical of their future civic pride many students entered into the spirit of co-operative effort to improve the physical surroundings of their respective schools. It is only when the appearance of the premises is a source of pride that the future citizen truly respects his school. Although such an effort has not always been consistently foremost in the Norridgewock schools, many times it has been stressed. The beloved Alice K. Folsom, in her school report of twenty-five years ago, urged the citizens to co-operate in making Arbor Day one to be remembered with gratitude. On the last annual observance of the day, high school students made permanent improvements of such a nature that the school yard somewhat approaches the orderly appearance of the rest of the street.

Previous school reports have emphasized the necessity of larger quarters to care for the ever increasing enrollment. Overcrowding has added much to our educational difficulties.

Under date of March 28th, 1932, Harrison C. Lyseth, state agent for secondary education, summarized his report on the high school building:

"It is quite probable that unless changes are made for better high school conditions than those existing at present, the Class A rating will be removed on the basis of Section 7, State High School Manual, Part 1, giving the three year period for improvement of conditions."

Financial conditions prohibit an increase in the expenditures for the coming year. Prohibitive expense and recent state laws made the re-opening of abandoned rural schools impossible.

All necessary repairs were made; the basement laboratory was enlarged; the Sawtelle Fund income aided in completing the payments on the Americana Encyclopedia bought two years ago.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Your attention is called to the following items: there is little doubt regarding the successful legislation.

Loss in state income will reduce our apportionment of the State School Fund approximately eighteen to twenty percent. If the proposed tax on tobacco is successful, this loss will be off-set.

Reduction for subsidies for special courses will be ten percent for the first year of the biennium and twenty percent for the second year of the biennium.

Not later than July 1, 1937, towns are to be re-grouped into larger school unions.

FINANCES

All bills pertaining to the schools were paid promptly during the fiscal year ending February 10th. The state equalization fund received was to be used for the maintenance of the salaries of teachers. This sum with donations made by school officials and teachers totaled an amount equal to ten percent of the annual wages. Conveyance drivers, hired as the law directs, voluntarily accepted ten percent reduction on the previous contracts.

The budget committee recommended a twenty-five percent reduction on total of last year. Decrease in income, counting the probable loss from the state, will be in excess of $4,000.00.

You will note the article pertaining to schools calls for $9,800.00, a sum covering all items formerly listed separately. Cutting the school budget is a delicate form of surgery that calls the highest skill and the greatest caution. Bungling surgery will mar hopelessly the future of several hundred children. No loss of educational efficiency will be incurred providing the expenditures can be undertaken only by those best informed—the superintending school committee. Delayed knowledge of the prospective appropriations and the probable amount of state aid prevented definite programs and estimates being presented at this time. The two standpoints of the new program will be education and economy; our common goal will be that which is of the greatest benefit to the boys and girls.

Your co-operation the past year is greatly appreciated.

PHILLIP H. WOODWORTH,

Superintendent of Schools

REPORT OF MANUAL TRAINING DEPARTMENT

Attention of Superintendent Phillip H. Woodworth:

Herewith is submitted my annual report of the Manual Training Department.

It is interesting to note when we speak of our present machine age and the effect it seems to have upon labor, that even as perfected as the machine may be, it is dependent upon man. Man created the machine to do his work, but the machine is dependent upon man for its continued operation and production.

So we find that man is called upon to apply his skills and abilities, so respected in the era of hand labor, with perhaps a greater degree of skill and accuracy at the present time than before.

Earning a living, whether with the aid of a machine or with his own abilities and knowledge, demands certain qualities of the workman. It is with these qualifications, abilities and skills in mind that the student applies himself in his manual training.

That the students are progressing in their work is evidenced by the increased complexity of construction in many of the projects undertaken. Students are willing to work at something requiring more careful workmanship, greater accuracy and a higher degree of skill.

In connection with the above, the State Department of Education tells us that eight-six boys out of every one hundred who graduate from high school, start from there to earn a living. This does not take into consideration the large percentage who enter school never to graduate. From the above figures it is evident that the majority of students should have an opportunity to learn something of a practical nature.

The woodwork is supplemented by a course in drafting and mechanical drawing. Few of us realize the important position held by drafting and how closely we come in contact with it. Each new machine or improvement is first conceived in the mind of man and is exhibited as drawing. Our homes and their equipment, from kitchen to bedroom pass through the drawing stage.

It is satisfying to see the interest shown by most of the students and as a study for the young man of the secondary school it seems to fit into his general education better than many other subjects.

A summary of the course as offered may be of interest to the uninitiated.

The first year is devoted to shape and size description, lettering and some scale drawings. Thirty sheets are planned as the work of the year, with the majority of sheets giving three views of the object.

The second year calls for "Pictorial Drawings", that is: isometric, oblique, cabinet, and perspective. Some time will be given to sheet metal drafting including development of elbows and intersections.

Mechanical drawing and Machine Details will be studied the third year. Included in this will be Standard Threads, Bolts and Screws. Detail and Assembly Drawing will take the greater part of the year together with the study of conventional representations.

Architectural Drafting will be offered the fourth year. Each student will complete the plans for a single story structure, drawing elevations and sections. If time permits, some study will be made of building details.

Work has progressed well the first half year with nearly all the students completing the required work. The sheets are so arranged that students may work as rapidly as their abilities permit and by doing so, opportunity is given to do extra sheets. Several students have taken advantage of this and have extra work to their credit.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES F. LANDERKIN, Instructor

REPORT OF HOME ECONOMICS DEPARTMENT

To Superintendent Phillip H. Woodworth:

Following is my annual report of the Home Economics Department:

The purpose of this course is many times misinterpreted. Many still think that home economics means merely cooking and sewing, or learning how to make a cake, to make a dress and the like. In fact by some it has been limited to making patchwork and that this can be easily learned in the home, and why not? Surely, if that is all that the course offers to a girl undoubtedly this could be learned at home.

The purpose of this course is to contribute to the general education of girls, (and to boys, if possible), through the following objectives: (1) To help boys and girls in their personal problems of right living. (2) To provide opportunity for developing appreciation of the contribution of well-adjusted individuals to the home, the school and community. (3) To give information which can be applied toward self-improvement physically and ethically. (4) To develop an appreciation and broad conception of home-life and home-making and wholesome attitude toward home and family.

Each boy and girl comes in contact with home-life in some way and needs to study it. This course does not stress the manual side of home life entirely, but does stress a conception of the social, economic and cultural aspects of everyday life.

Briefly each class is thus engaged: The work of the seventh grade girls deals principally with foods and clothing. Their work in foods deals with health mainly—discussion of the causes of the different diseases, a study of the classes of foods, their function and sources of each. What constitutes a wholesome breakfast and luncheon. Why a girl needs a wholesome breakfast in order to start the day in right. Table service and etiquette are carried out through mock breakfasts, luncheons, and occasionally a real meal is served.

The clothing course includes a review of the simple stitches (learned in the sixth grade) in the making of a simple problem. The making of models of the different seams, the cutting and applying of true bias, the use of the sewing machine, the commercial pattern and finally the cutting and making of some article of underwear, pajamas, or school dress.

The work of the eighth grade is divided into three units: (1) Foods and marketing; (2) home-making and first aid; (3) clothing and textiles. The two main projects in the foods course is the planning, buying, preparation, and serving of wholesome lunches and dinners.

A continued study of the food values is made and the principles in cooking such foods as vegetables, meats, protein cooking—quick breads, yeast bread and simple dessert—is discussed and as far as possible these foods are prepared in class.

The cost of food is studied—how to buy and causes of “leaks” in buying.

Finally, the kitchen is given attention as to interior finish, selection and arrangement of equipment, convenience in relation to other parts of the home. Plans are studied and scored and as a final problem each girl plans a kitchen applying the principles mentioned.

Home nursing and first aid—study of home and community sanitation, home care of the sick, care of the sick room, general care of the patient, bed, and administering of medicine.

The course in clothing and textiles is a continuation of the course in the seventh grade. A study of the fibres is made—as to cultivation, manufacture, types and uses of the staple fabrics on the market. Points to look for in buying ready-made garments. Cost of ready-made versus home-made garments. The principles of good design in choosing a pattern for ready-made dress.

The Freshman girls who take the home economics course have been studying “The Girl and Her Home”—which deals with the management of the home, i. e. what makes a house a home? Contributions of the members of the family; development of desirable character traits, necessity of co-operation, and that of assuming responsibility. Then Home Finance, a study of the sources of income, to realize the responsibility a girl or boy has for asking for money, if it is for the best good to all members of the family, to consider living according to a plan—the budget and keeping accounts, the making of budgets for various types of families with limited incomes, the need of a family council in discussing all the problems that each member of the family comes in contact with. Child Care—the effect of heredity and environment on the child—the physical, mental, social and spiritual development of the child during the first five years of his life. Home Furnishings—making the home an attractive place wherein to live, not necessarily through buying expensive furnishings, but by neatness and orderliness, by the application of the principles of good design through the making and hanging of draperies, selection of pictures, wall and floor coverings and so forth.

The Sophomore Nutrition class this year has had very few lessons in cooking, principally because of the expense. The application of the good principles has been developed in the planning, preparation and serving of the hot lunch at noon. These girls have learned to plan simple, well-balanced meals, thus guarding against symptoms of the deficiency diseases. Special emphasis has been given to the subject of buying—guarding against “tricky” advertisements to detect quality in products—charge versus cash in buying. The need of a plan in doing the day’s work in order that there will be time for the activities that both children and adults need to meet outside of the home in order that their mode of living be the finest type of American homes.

The Junior and Senior girls have been studying textiles the first part of the year, and are now studying dress construction. Some are cutting and making garments for themselves, others are making (little) suits and dresses for small children—having made a study of the fibres—the steps in the development of the raw material into a fabric. How to detect materials and the history of the textile industry.

A few weeks were spent at Christmas time on decorative stitches. Samplers were made and each girl made a problem applying some of the stitches learned. Very attractive pillow slips of Italian cutwork and hemstitching were made, also luncheon cloths and napkins with colorful appliqued motives were made. Special lessons on bound buttonholes, set in pockets, use of the sewing machine attachments have been developed. Models are made, as many of these special problems are later applied in the making of garments. Home practice has been requested in some of the lessons. Reports being made when the problems are completed. Such lessons as laying the table correctly for five suppers according to the menu, keeping accounts of the money spent on food purchased for the week, discussing later if spent in right proportion for the needed various foodstuffs, keeping of personal cash accounts, preparation of foods, the general care of own room for a week, the care of the smaller children in the family.

"What functions in the life of a student is only that information which is understood which one is taught to use and finds opportunity for using".

Respectfully submitted,

MILDRED H. MacINTIRE
